Bye, children! Behave yourselves while I'm out buying groceries!" Mrs Lim warned her sons, Ben and John, before she left for the market. It was only a stone's throw away. The boys were so engrossed in a television programme that they barely looked up.

Ben was fascinated by the show about camping outdoors. "I want to make a campfire too," Ben thought, out of boredom, once the show ended. He rolled up some pieces of newspaper and struck a match to light them up. John, his younger brother, cast a curious glance at him, puzzled by wh...

"Let's build a fort!" Ben exclaimed as soon as their mother left. He grabbed a pile of pillows and blankets from the living room. John, eager to join in, followed suit. They built an elaborate fortress with cushions and draped sheets over chairs to create their hideout. The boys crawled inside, pretending to defend their castle from imaginary dragons.

Suddenly, Ben got another idea. "Let's add a campfire!" He gathered some twigs from the backyard and tried to mimic what he had seen on TV. John watched nervously as Ben lit a match. The flames quickly grew, and panic set in. "Put it out!" John shouted, grabbing a glass of water just in time.
